

Japanese Language and Literature

Journal of the American Association of Teachers of Japanese

jll.pitt.edu | Vol. 56 | Number 1 | April 2022 | DOI: 10.5195/jll.2022.244

ISSN 1536-7827 (print) 2326-4586 (online)

CONTRIBUTORS

Hiromi Tsuchiya Dollase (hidollase@vassar.edu) is Associate Professor of Japanese language and literature at Vassar College. Her areas of research include Japanese women's literature, girls' magazine culture, and shōjo manga. Her current research project focuses on Japanese women's culture and history as filtered through manga. She is the author of Age of Shōjo: Emergence, Evolution and Power of Girls' Magazine Fiction in Japan (SUNY Press, 2019). She has co-edited Shōjo Manga Wandārando (Meiji shoin, 2012) and Manga!: Visual Pop-Culture in ARTS Education (InSEA, 2020).

Tepei Fukuda (tfukuda@pdx.edu) wrote his master's thesis "Moonlit Nights and Seasons of Romance: Yosano Akiko's Use of the Moon in Tangled Hair" and received his M. A. degree in Japanese at Portland State University in 2020. He taught Japanese language and culture from 2017 to 2019 and has worked as a study-abroad coordinator at PSU. His research interests include Japanese poetry, manga, and the aesthetics of seasons in modern Japan.

Natsuki Fukunaga (andersonn@marshall.edu) is Associate Professor of Japanese and chair of the Department of Modern Languages at Marshall University. Her research interests are language learning and teaching in educational psychology, anthropology, and socio-linguistics. "Those anime students': Foreign language literacy development through Japanese popular culture" (2006) in the Journal of Adolescent & Adult Literacy discusses ways to expand students' learning by examining the impact of popular culture on identity development.

New articles in this journal are licensed under a Creative Commons Attribution 4.0 United States License.

This journal is published by the University Library System, University of Pittsburgh as part of its D-Scribe Digital Publishing Program and is cosponsored by the University of Pittsburgh Press.

Jon Holt (joholt@pdx.edu) is Associate Professor of Japanese at Portland State University. His research interests include modern Japanese poetry, Japanese Buddhism, and manga. Recent publications include: “Ishii Takashi, Beyond 1979: Ero Gekiga Godfather, GARO Inheritor, or Shōjo Manga Artist” (International Journal of Comic Art, 2019), “X-Rated and Excessively Long: Ji-Amari in Hayashi Amari’s Tanka” (U. S.–Japan Women’s Journal, 2018), and “Chocolate Revolutionary: Tawara Machi’s Rule-Breaking Tanka Verses” (Japanese Language and Literature, 2018). He has published translations of the poetry of Hayashi Amari (Asymptote web journal, 2015), Yamanokuchi Baku, and Mabuni Chōshin (Islands of Resistance: Japanese Literature from Okinawa, 2016).

Ayako Kano (kanoayako@gmail.com) is Professor in the Department of East Asian Languages and Civilizations, University of Pennsylvania. She is the author of Acting Like a Woman in Modern Japan: Theater, Gender, and Nationalism (Palgrave, 2001), and Japanese Feminist Debates: A Century of Contention on Sex, Love, and Labor (Hawai‘i, 2016). She is also co-editor of Rethinking Japanese Feminisms (Hawai‘i, 2018) with Julia Bullock and James Welker.

Kimi Kondo-Brown (kondo@hawaii.edu) is Professor of Japanese in the Department of East Asian Languages and Literatures at the University of Hawai‘i at Mānoa, the flagship campus of the University of Hawai‘i system. She is also Associate Dean for Academic Affairs of the College of Arts, Languages and Letters. She has published widely in the fields of language education and assessment and also delivered numerous presentations and talks at conferences.

Kiri Lee (kjl2@Lehigh.edu) is Professor of Japanese in the Department of Modern Languages and Literatures at Lehigh University. Her research areas are Japanese pragmatics and heritage language education. She collaborates with Korean linguists on comparative analyses of Japanese and Korean pragmatics. In the field of heritage language education, she is the co-author of Constructing the Heritage Language Learner: Knowledge, Power, and New Subjectivities (De Gruyter, 2013).

Jingyi Li (jingyili@email.arizona.edu) is a doctoral candidate at the University of Arizona studying about Tokugawa literary history. Her dissertation project explores the economic roles of celebrity banquets (shogakai) and bunjin networks in the nineteenth century.

Ronald Loftus (rloftus@willamette.edu) taught Japanese history, language, literature, and film for over forty years. His research interests include late Meiji social and intellectual history, and women's "self-writing," publishing two books on this subject: Telling Lives (University of Hawai'i Press, 2004) and Changing Lives (Association of Asian Studies, 2013) on postwar Japan. In 2017, he completed a biography of a Meiji social and cultural critic, The Turn Against the Modern: The Critical Essays of Taoka Reiun (1870-1912) (Association for Asian Studies).

Matthew Mewhinney (mmewhinney@fsu.edu) is Assistant Professor in the Department of Modern Languages and Linguistics at Florida State University. His research interests include lyric poetry and theory, literati culture, subjectivity, and narrative in Japanese literature. He is the editor of Proceedings of the Association for Japanese Literary Studies 20. He is also the author of the forthcoming book, Form and Feeling in Japanese Literati Culture (Palgrave Macmillan).

Junko Mori (jmori@wisc.edu) is Professor of Japanese language and linguistics at the University of Wisconsin-Madison. Through the microanalysis of social interactions, she has investigated linguistic structures in use, classroom discourse, and intercultural communication. She has also examined issues concerning diversity, equity and inclusion manifested in various professional communities and workplaces. Her recent work has appeared in Applied Linguistics, Journal of Sociolinguistics, Language Teaching, and Multilingua, among others.

Misumi Sadler (sadlerm@illinois.edu) is Associate Professor of Japanese Linguistics and Pedagogy, director of the Japanese Language Program, and director of the Center for East Asian and Pacific Studies at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign. Her research interests include grammar-pragmatics interface, language change, discourse analysis in social media, and pre-service teacher training. She received her doctorate from University of Arizona in 2002.

Jeremy Sather (jsather@vt.edu) is Assistant Professor of Japanese at Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University. His research deals with violence, real and literary, in medieval Japanese war tales (gunki monogatari). He has published articles on Imagawa Ryōshun's Nan-Taiheiki (Criticisms of the Taiheiki) and the Taiheiki (A chronicle of great peace), and is currently working on a book about the latter text and its relationship to violence in the samurai ethos.

Mikhail Skovoronskikh (mikhail.skovoronskikh@colorado.edu) is currently pursuing a Ph. D. degree in Japanese at the University of Colorado, Boulder. He is particularly interested in early modern Japanese thought, Sino-Japanese literature, and the reception of continental culture in Edo-period Japan. Before joining CU, Mikhail taught East Asian history and literary Chinese to undergraduate students and was employed at Mitsui Bussan, a Japanese general trading company, as well as a few think tanks in Washington, D. C.

Satoko Suzuki (suzuki@macalester.edu), DeWitt Wallace Professor of Asian Languages and Cultures, teaches Japanese language and linguistics courses at Macalester College. Her research interests include sociolinguistics, linguistic anthropology, and pragmatics. Her current scholarly work focuses on language and identity studies and language ideologies. Her recent work has appeared in Gender and Language, East Asian Pragmatics, Japanese Studies, and Pragmatics.

Kai Xie (xie2@kenyon.edu) is Assistant Professor of Japanese at Kenyon College. She received her Ph. D. from the University of Washington, Seattle. She is interested in premodern Japanese literature, with a concentration on Sino-Japanese comparisons and interactions. She has published articles in Japanese Language and Literature and Asian Theatre Journal. Her current book project examines wakan renku, a poetic form in which Japanese and Chinese verses are composed in alternating turns.