

Japanese Language and Literature

Journal of the American Association of Teachers of Japanese

jll.pitt.edu | Vol. 59 | Number 2 | November 2025 | DOI: 10.5195/jll.2025.436

ISSN 1536-7827 (print) 2326-4586 (online)

CONTRIBUTORS

Marjorie Burge (Marjorie.Burge@colorado.edu) is Assistant Professor of Japanese in the Department of Asian Languages and Civilizations at the University of Colorado, Boulder. She earned her PhD from the University of California, Berkeley, in 2018. Her research focuses on the early written cultures of Korea and Japan in the sixth through eighth centuries.

J.-R. Hayashishita (j-r.hayashishita@otago.ac.nz) is a Senior Lecturer in Japanese at the University of Otago, New Zealand. His research aims to develop a comprehensive linguistic theory, and he has published in various areas of linguistics including the speaker's lexicon, syntax, semantics, and phonology. His work on quantifier scope and comparatives has been well received among Japanese linguists. He is also the founder and director of DonDoushiDon Ltd, a linguistic research institute, where he leads the Don 動詞どん project, a large-scale research project on the Japanese lexicon, and describes the argument structures of commonly used Japanese verbs (www.dondoushidon.org).

Sachi Kondo (sachi.fev@gmail.com) is a promising emerging researcher and educator. She received her M.A. in Linguistics from Kyushu University, Japan, in 2025. She is currently a Lecturer at the Kurume Institute of International Relations, Japan, where she teaches Japanese to students of various proficiency levels. Her research interests include Japanese syntax, semantics, and language pedagogy. She is also a main contributor to the Don 動詞どん project.

Kyoko Matsui Loetscher (kml2168@columbia.edu) is Senior Lecturer in Japanese and Director of the Japanese Language Program in the Department of East Asian Languages and Cultures at Columbia University. Her research focuses on second language acquisition and Japanese pedagogy, with emphasis on curriculum development and instructional

New articles in this journal are licensed under a Creative Commons Attribution 4.0 United States License.

Pitt

Open
Library
Publishing

This journal is published by Pitt Open Library Publishing.

design. She is co-author of Shokyū Nihongo no Moji Project [Orthography Project for Elementary Japanese], included in Mirai o tsukuru kotoba no kyōiku o mezashite. She is currently leading curriculum reform initiatives grounded in the Multiliteracies approach and aligned with the CEFR.

Yuko Miyoshi (miyoshi3@aoni.waseda.jp) is an Associate Professor at the Center for Japanese Language, Waseda University, Japan, where she teaches Japanese courses at various levels to international students. Her research focuses on Japanese language pedagogy, particularly grammar and vocabulary instruction. She is a pioneer in teaching Japanese verbs based on their usage patterns and has examined the effectiveness of this methodology, presenting her findings widely in Japan. She is also a main contributor to the Don 動詞どん project.

Stephen J. Moody (sjmoody@byu.edu) is Associate Professor of Asian and Near Eastern Languages at Brigham Young University. He holds an MA in economics from The Ohio State University and a PhD in East Asian languages and literatures from the University of Hawai'i. His research interests include language and social identity, conversation analysis, and intercultural interaction in professional settings. He is the author of Humor, Identity, and Belonging: Constructing the Foreign in American-Japanese Interaction (De Gruyter Mouton, 2024) and co-editor of Navigating Friendships in Interaction: Discursive and Ethnographic Perspectives (Routledge, 2024). Other recent articles appear in Applied Linguistics, Journal of Pragmatics, and Language in Society.

Emi Mukai (emimukai@kansai-gaidai.ac.jp) is an Assistant Professor at Kansai Gaidai University, Japan. She earned her Ph.D. in Linguistics from the University of Southern California in 2012. Her doctoral dissertation focused on Japanese syntax. Since then, she has taught Japanese at universities in both the U.S. and Japan. In recent years, she has taken on the role of training Japanese students to become Japanese language teachers, offering courses on intercultural understanding and Japanese grammar. She is also a main contributor to the Don 動詞どん project.

Jeffrey Niedermaier (jeffrey_niedermaier@brown.edu) is the Mulberry Essence Assistant Professor of Japanese Literature in the Department of Comparative Literature and the Department of East Asian Studies at Brown University. He earned his PhD from Yale in 2021. His research focuses on Japanese and Chinese poetics and the courtly Japanese imagination of the world beyond Japan's shores.

Noriko Sugimori (sugimori@kzoo.edu) is Professor of Japanese in the East Asian Studies Department and the Japanese Program at Kalamazoo College. Her research focuses on historical sociolinguistics and critical language pedagogy. She is currently co-authoring a Japanese-English bilingual book, Human Rights in Japanese Language Teaching (working title), under contract with Palgrave Macmillan.

Daiki Tanaka (dtanaka@naruto-u.ac.jp) is a Professor in the Global Education Course at Naruto University of Education, Japan. He plays a key role in Japanese language education for international students and in training Japanese language teachers. Drawing on his research on the interface between Japanese syntax and semantics, he develops instructional materials for learners of Japanese. He is also a founding member and a main contributor to the Don 動詞どん project.

Pier Carlo Tommasi (ptommasi@vassar.edu) is Assistant Professor of Japanese at Vassar College. He earned his Ph.D. from Ca' Foscari University of Venice, Italy, and previously worked at the University of Hawai'i at Mānoa. His research focuses on medieval literature, with particular attention to life-writing, manuscripts, and samurai culture.

Ayumi Ueyama (ueyama@lit.kyushu-u.ac.jp) is a Professor of Linguistics at Kyushu University, Japan. Her research interests lie in linguistic theories concerning the speaker's lexicon, syntax, semantics, and phonology. She aims to describe the contribution of the computational system in the speaker's mind to sentence meaning and sound. She is well known for her research on anaphora. She has pioneered a new approach to investigating sentence meaning and has developed a theoretical framework called Syntax Semantics, in which the semantic representation generated by syntax is modeled as a set of layered objects. She is also a founding member and a main contributor to the Don 動詞どん project.

Yue Wang (wangyue1@wustl.edu) is a Ph.D. candidate in modern Japanese literature with a gender studies graduate certificate at Washington University in St. Louis. She received her Master's degree on Japanese women's reproductive dystopian fiction from The University of British Columbia. Her research focuses on Japanese women's writings, feminist theories, ecological studies, and posthumanism. Her article "Eat A Life, Make A Life: Posthuman Love in Murata Sayaka's 'Life Ceremony'" is included in a forthcoming Routledge volume of love in world literature. She is currently working on the feminist and posthumanist construction of body, gender, and knowledge in Japanese dystopian fiction.